« In 1955, I went to Barcelona. There I saw the beautiful Park Guell of Gaudi. I met both my master and my destiny. I trembled all over. I knew that I was meant one day to build my own garden of Joy. A little corner of Paradise. A meeting place between man and Nature. Twenty four years later I would embark on the biggest adventure of my life, the Tarot Garden. »

Niki de Saint Phalle

From 1978 until her death in 2002, Niki de Saint Phalle set out on the most ambitious artistic adventure of her career: the Tarot Garden. A vast sculpture park representing the 22 major arcana of the divinatory tarot. The sculptures were made with iron reinforcements, covered with projected concrete, then mirrors and ceramics. The ceramics were made (casted and baked) on site, and handcrafted.

To finance the construction, Saint Phalle was determined to be her own patron. She created a perfume, multiples and limited editions.

The Tarot Garden has been open to the public since 1998.
